E11	Cuius Missio, Eius Ethica: Is Christian Ethics Integral to Mission?	Most Christians agree that the hard work of submitting all things to Christ begins immediately after our prayer of commitment and belief in God ends. Submitting all things to Christ surely includes changes to behaviour, decisions, and character – what we might call ethics. Clearly, our character is as integral as our creed. What might this mean in relation to Christian mission? What	Rev Dr Nathanael Goh Rev Dr Nathanael Goh is an ordained deacon appointed to Sengkang Methodist Church, Singapore. He also co-teaches Christian ethics at Trinity Theological College. He is a graduate of Durham University, where he undertook doctoral

		role, if any, does Christian ethics play in a multicultural and postmodern world? Is it even sensible to speak of a Christian ethic, or should we instead speak of a plurality of fluid, local, and contextual Christian ethics? And how might the way we construe ethics impact our understanding of mission?	studies in Scripture, politics and Christian ethics.
E12	Missions and Millennials	The Lausanne Covenant crafted the statement that “evangelization requires the whole church to take the whole gospel to the whole world.” Yet oftentimes, missions seem to be the prerogative of those with a specific call or gifting. How can the church engage the millennials and how might they be challenged to participate in God’s mission? This workshop presents the challenges and opportunities in engaging the next generation with specific examples from campus ministry.	Mr Jeremiah Goh Mr Jeremiah Goh is currently General Secretary of the Fellowship of Evangelical Students, Singapore.
